INFORMATION FOR PARENTS

“Helping parents understand and respond to their infant’s unique way of communicating is probably the most important intervention to the infant’s development of a secure attachment.”

P Svanberg (2002)

The first three years of your child's life are the most important as the brain rapidly develops.

This development is fully dependant on the interaction between their carers and the environment they live in.

Your baby/child forms attachment with you as you respond to their physical and emotional needs.

Research has proven that bonding with your baby/child creates the foundation of a 'secure base' in their later life.

With your assistance your baby/child learns how to manage his/her stress.

Look at, smile, talk calmly, sing, and read to your baby/child.

Hold, cuddle, gently rock, stroke, encourage skin to skin contact, and soothe your baby/child.

You cannot spoil your baby/child. What happens in the early years affects the course of development across the lifespan.

The Southern Health and Social Care Trust offers Specialist Infant Mental Health intervention within its Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services.

The Infant Mental Health Practitioner offers you early intervention in order to promote your baby/child’s emotional and mental health and your developing relationship and help you gain support from other useful agencies.

With your permission, your health professional can refer you to i-CAMHS if there are concerns about your baby/child’s mental and emotional health.
